the Soviet Air Force, supplied with MIG-15's, is dispersed

in a close network along the Polish coast, the Polish-German frontier and the Polish-Czechoslovak frontier, and that in a matter of seconds, a number of planes, and if necessary, several hundred, can be dispatched from any, of the air bases, in any direction whatsoever, in pursuit of an escaping flier.

the commander of any air force unit, on learning that a flier is about to escape, is empowered to give an order to shoot him down, but only while the escape is over Polish terretory. Once he is outside Polish territory, the commander must obtain an order for pursuit from the Air Force Command at Warsaw, an order which, naturally, will be forthcoming. However, the few minutes consumed in radio communications between an air force unit and the Air Force Command may well be sufficient for a fleeing pilot to have reached safe haven.
